We love dysfunctional-family memoirist Augusten Burroughs of Running with Scissors fame, and now we love his older brother too. In Look Me in the Eye, John Elder Robison tells his story of growing up with Asperger's syndrome—a diagnosis he didn't receive until he was 40. Despite a chaotic home life, Robison used his neurodiversity to become a hypertalented engineer, the head of pyrotechnics for glam-rockers KISS, and a legendary prankster. This candid, emotional, and humorous memoir reminds us that erring on the side of empathy and understanding is always best.
